4) Read the text below to understand the Industrial Revolution's impact on design's development:

The Industrial Revolution

Up until the Industrial Revolution objects were made by craftsmen, either working on their own, collectively in rural cottage industries or in Guilds or Societies in the towns. The majority worked at a low level of skill and design, producing simple buildings, furniture, plates etc. This resulted in localized designs often produced by generations of one family with no technological or design style changes. It was as if time stood still. There were a few craftsmen who worked for the nobility and the rich merchants producing objects based on designs and technology taken from other countries. They formed their own design styles, but they still could only make a limited number of objects at a high price. These objects can now be seen in museums.

The dates given for design style movements can only be approximate. Nothing suddenly happens. In many cases two styles overlap, one was fading away and one coming in. The reasons why these new movements occur are a complex mix of historical, political and social facts, but that's history. The time between 1914 and 1950 was a period of great upheaval, loss of life and world depression. However new technologies still steadily improved and design went through different styles. (First World War 1914—1918, Second World War 1939—1945). The history of Industrial Design really began with the start of the Industrial Revolution that took place during the early part of the 1700's with the invention of mechanical processes of production. Everything changed, for the first time it was possible to produce large quantities of a product cheap enough for most people to own. The design of the product came out of the technology available at the time. Ceramic manufacturers found it easy to mass-produce plain white plates but still had to paint on the pattern by hand — too expensive. They developed a method of transfer printing but only blue ink would withstand the high temperatures used during the glazing process. This is why all the plates of the early period are blue, the most famous being the Willow Pattern. As ink technology improved, so did the colour and complexity of the patterns.

Design was led by its technology and was of a very low standard with very little thought for the user. Manufacturers spent no money on beautifying their products as they had little competition and were out to make as much money as possible. In those days designers were either architects or artists and manufacturers felt no need to use them.

In the early part of the 1800's, people began to realize that there was a problem. The architect, Charles Cockerel said "the attempt to supersede the work of the mind and the hand by mechanical process for the sake of economy will always have the effect of degrading and ultimately ruining art". Many years later, the Bauhaus used technological processes as the basis of their designs. In 1833, a Parliamentary Select Committee was set up to examine the problem of a low standard of product design. The morality of the country was felt to be reflected through its art. This feeling is still held today by many academics. In 1837, a government School of Art was set up with the aim to train designers for working with industry but it failed. It took the Great Exhibition of 1851 and the Arts and Crafts Movement to change things.

Profession of a Designer

The positive thing of this profession is that it gives you challenges, gives you possibilities to create and get satisfaction from the task fulfilled seeing the results of your work. However, design industry is growing in great paces worldwide. Competition is number one in this sphere and you are to be the best to become successful and get the job. Besides, the advertisement influences our lives greatly. Another fact is that a designer can use it in an ethical way or visa versa. Indeed, the design profession has a high under-employment rate. That is why it is really difficult to find a good job with decent salary at a design company, to make up a good advertisement.

In fact, profession of a designer consists of several ones as it demands communicative, technical, analytical, artistic and advertisement skills. You must be really a good designer having necessary qualifications and most importantly necessary skills to obtain a good job. There are no regulations in designer sphere and everyone can say he is a designer and use unethical advertisement programs. Such designers can perform their work bad making company directors paying lower salaries to others. He will not pay you a good salary being unsure in the quality of your work. In addition universities accept many people who want to become designers overcrowding the designer market.

A designer is a craftsman of his affair. He must have talent and an understanding of the today's world. He is a professional in 'visual communication'. The role of a designer consists in the creation of images, languages to display some messages and to reach his purposes. It is a pity that all the above mentioned things can be nothing without good advertisement. He needs to use some advertisement programs to find a work. A designer is a craftsman who operates in a completely new way mastering language and image means, mixing traditional knowledge of a subject and personal ideas, realizing communication tools. Communication and sales skills are significant for this profession if you want to be successful.

Designers work many hours and to meet a deadline they have to work overtime. This work requires hard work with deadlines. You must be sure you can work this way to take up the designer career. If you still want to become a designer you should decide what type of a designer you want to choose. A designer requires much more than just the talent in drawing. This profession requires attention to technical side of a matter, communication with clients and directors, and surely advertisements.

Nowadays, visual communication professionals possessing technological and managerial skills issue the challenge to perform not only designers' tasks but also fulfilling the role of art directors and managers, advertising own projects in order to take root to international markets. Today, designers must solve difficult designers' tasks – planning team activities, managing public relations, clients' problems and producing ethical advertisement.

Thus, a profession of a designer is the combination of personal creative abilities and technical knowledge of a subject. It is a mix of cultural knowledge with analytical abilities. A real designer is a person who understands the dynamics and the inner context of his affair. He is the one who generates the visual presentation and design of goods. Designers usually work on a project under great time pressure and defined financial and design limits. To perform work of a high quality a designer must unite the best parts of different sources into some image.

Besides, this work assumes the use of research material and price specifications, the ability to meet deadlines, financial restrictions, creation of a number of work samples and sketches displaying several work models from different points of view.

It is not so easy to be a designer, to take a note of comments concerning own projects, to have a good understanding of today's world and its demands, to create several sketches of the same work. Also, the work of a designer assumes some amount of project rejects, period of success and failures. The work of designers means understanding your clients' wishes, helping them in achieving their goals by focusing on things that can be fulfilled, translating these purposes into work projects. A designer must value tradition as well as creativity, change, improvement, and relevance to the modern time. This work can be compared to the work of an artist: you fully depend on your talent, your abilities and fortune. Sometimes it is an exhausting work: working long time on a project, endless meeting with people and collaborators. The life of a designer is unpredictable and can change suddenly both in good and bad way. Sometimes you are successful and earn great money having the opportunity to choose client, sometimes you have failures and cannot find a single client.

Why do You Want to Be A Designer? – Advice for Young Designers

When choosing a design career, one of the first things to ask yourself is, —Why do I want to be a designer? Everyone has different influences in their life to for their opinions about choosing a career. My advice for young designers is to think about what inspires you into a field of designing? Whether you want to be an architect, fashion/jewelry designer or culinary chef – all these careers require a mindset to enjoy what you do, even though it will require years of hard work, research, and tenacity.

Here are tips to consider for young designers today:

One of the hardest areas for young designers to understand is that knowledge and skills don't only come from a formal education, but can be soaked up from life around you. From traveling, reading, listening to music, learning other cultures lifestyles, these are the best ways to prepare for a design career. Choose the design profession you like and learn what tools, resources, and background you need to be successful in this career before pouring your life and soul into it.

Shadow a designer or follow in their steps:

Another tip for young designers is to find a veteran designer in your career field and follow in their steps for your life path. While you don't have to take step-for- step of a veteran designer, it will help determine if this career path is for you.

Many high-profile design jobs look like all glitz and glam until you see the behind scenes' and grunt work of hours of preparation and resource gathering. Look to your favorite design blogs and professional networks to link to and follow those who are influential in the design career path you'd like to pursue.

Try it out – before you agree to it:

For many young designers the options of interning at a design firm or online design blog can be a great way to get your hands dirty` before you have to commit to a full lifetime of being a designer. If you want to be a designer, look for summer internships or apprenticeships that are short term to help you decide.

Lastly, love design for the sheer joy of enjoyment and not the monetary means it could lead to. There is no guarantee in any design career that you will succeed immediately or that you will be blissfully happy the first few years. Enjoy your new career of design for being able to solve a challenge or a need, and then create a solution that is beautifully designed. If you focus purely on making more money or being a high profile designer, you may experience burnout before you even get started. If you are a young designer trying to start out, look to these helpful tips to help guide you in many of your important decisions. Careers can change and you don't have to stay planted in one area. Enjoy yourself as you plan your life as a young designer.

Graphic Design

Suppose you want to announce or sell something, amuse or persuade someone, explain a complicated system or demonstrate a process. In other words, you have a message you want to communicate. How do you —send it? You could tell people one by one or broadcast by radio or loudspeaker. That's verbal communication. But if you use any visual medium at all — if you make a poster; type a letter; create a business logo, a magazine ad, or an album cover; even make a computer printout — you are using a form of visual communication called graphic design.

Graphic designers work with drawn, painted, photographed, or computer-generated images (pictures), but they also design the letterforms that make up various typefaces found in movie credits and TV ads; in books, magazines, and menus; and even on computer screens. Designers create, choose, and organize these elements — typography, images, and the so-called —white space around them — to communicate a message. Graphic design is a part of your daily life.

From humble things like gum wrappers to huge things like billboards to the T- shirt you're wearing, graphic design informs, persuades, organizes, stimulates, locates, identifies, attracts attention and provides pleasure.

Graphic design is a creative process that combines art and technology to communicate ideas. The designer works with a variety of communication tools in order to convey a message from a client to a particular audience. The main tools are image and typography.

Image-based design

Designers develop images to represent the ideas their clients want to communicate. Images can be incredibly powerful and compelling tools of communication, conveying not only information but also moods and emotions. People respond to images instinctively based on their personalities, associations, and previous experience. For example, you know that a chili pepper is hot, and this knowledge in combination with the image creates a visual pun.

In the case of image-based design, the images must carry the entire message; there are few if any words to help. These images may be photographic, painted, drawn, or graphically rendered in many different ways. Image-based design is employed when the designer determines that, in a particular case, a picture is indeed worth a thousand words.

Type-based design

In some cases, designers rely on words to convey a message, but they use words differently from the ways writers do. To designers, what the words look like is as important as their meaning. The visual forms whether (communication designed by means of the printed word) or handmade lettering, perform many communication functions. They can arrest your attention on a poster, identify the product name on a package or a truck, and present running text as the typography in a book does. Designers are experts at presenting information in a visual form in print or on film, packaging, or signs. When you look at an —ordinary printed page of running text, what is involved in designing such a seemingly simple page? Think about what you would do if you were asked to redesign the page. Would you change the typeface or type size?

Would you divide the text into two narrower columns? What about the margins and the spacing between the paragraphs and lines? Would you indent the paragraphs or begin them with decorative lettering? What other kinds of treatment might you give the page number? Would you change the boldface terms, perhaps using italic or underlining? What other changes might you consider, and how would they affect the way the reader reacts to the content? Designers evaluate the message and the audience for type-based design in order to make these kinds of decisions.

Image and type

Designers often combine images and typography to communicate a client's message to an audience. They explore the creative possibilities presented by words (typography) and images (photography, illustration, and fine art). It is up to the designer not only to find or create appropriate letterforms and images but also to establish the best balance between them. Designers are the link between the client and the audience. On the one hand, a client is often too close to the message to understand various ways in which it can be presented. The audience, on the other hand, is often too broad to have any direct impact on how a communication is presented. What's more, it is usually difficult to make the audience a part of the creative process. Unlike client and audience, graphic designers learn how to construct a message and how to present it successfully. They work with the client to understand the content and the purpose of the message. They often collaborate with market researchers and other specialists to understand the nature of the audience. Once a design concept is chosen, the designers work with illustrators and photographers as well as with typesetters and printers or other production specialists to create the final design product.

Symbols, logos and logotypes

Symbols and logos are special, highly condensed information forms or identifiers. Symbols are abstract representation of a particular idea or identity. The CBS —eye and the active —television are symbolic forms, which we learn to recognize as representing a particular concept or company. Logotypes are corporate identifications based on a special typographical word treatment. Some identifiers are hybrid, or combinations of symbol and logotype. In order to create these identifiers, the designer must have a clear vision of the corporation or idea to be represented and of the audience to which the message is directed.

12) Read the text again and answer the following questions:

1. What do graphic designers use for communication?
2. What is the difference between the type based design and image-based design?
